As you drag after the gradient preview, Photoshop measures the distance between the gradient's start and end points and creates a gradient that fades from the start color to the end color. It's useful for darkening or brightening areas in photos. You can also use a Gradient to choose each individual color in the gradient. For example, to darken a photo in a very specific area, you may want to start with a light color to get a lot of coverage of that image, and then use the Gradient's end color to lighten a specific area. Lightroom Note: To add, remove, or adjust the colors in a gradient, select the gradient in the Gradient tool and in the Gradient panel, click the gradient bar and select the colors you want to adjust. e3d0a04c9c
