Apparently It's An Anti-Terrorist Network - mtgx ===== ColinWright As the item says, it's the US Immigration and Customs Agency. It's an anti- terrorist network, staffed largely by part-time volunteers, tracking individuals suspected of supporting terrorist organisations. They're not to be trifled with. It's perfectly normal. ~~~ Doctor_Fegg The story says "It's unclear who has taken Steve into custody." If that's the case, I guess that would be because, unlike you, he actually knew what was going on and wasn't being willfully dense. [Therapeutic management of breast cancer]. Breast cancer (BC) is the second most common cancer in women. Its incidence has increased by more than 35% in France over the last decade. Surgery remains the standard treatment for BC. Its role, however, is changing, not only because of the increasing number of non-surgical treatments, but also because in many patients "optimal surgery" no longer means an adequate surgical excision. The latter is due to the progress made in radiotherapy, hormone treatments, and chemotherapy, which have made conservative treatment of BC acceptable for most women. The management of the BC patient, which includes diagnostic and therapeutic decisions, should be discussed with the patient, and the management plan (treatment, quality of life, and prevention) should be explained in detail to the patient. This should also include the right to discuss and take part in decisions regarding her treatment. In certain situations, the patient's consent must be obtained or reaffirmed before surgery. The consequences of the therapy that will be followed for breast cancer are not only medical, but also socio-economic and psycho-social (fear of recurrence, body image, sexual functions, and fertility). In terms of its medical effects, the difficulty is to know what constitutes optimal treatment for BC patients and to know how these results are to be interpreted by the patient. Every patient has different expectations
