It makes the process of .Federer won't return to ATP World Tour Finals Novak Djokovic and Roger Federer have played in four of the last six ATP Finals and the world number one will be missing from the showpiece event for the first time in a decade. Milos Raonic will be the highest-ranked Canadian in the singles field, but Canada's first appearance in the Finals will be a major disappointment for a number of reasons. The event, scheduled for November 20-30 in London, has reached its logical conclusion. Instead of pairing top seeds Djokovic and Federer, it was announced on Monday that the pair will not be competing. That move was somewhat surprising given the ongoing success of both players, and calls from fans for them to remain in the competition. Andy Murray recently returned from a shoulder injury, but he will face Pablo Carretero in the first round on Tuesday, with the Spaniard ranked 123rd. The four-time defending champion has averaged fewer than two matches per year over the past nine seasons, though he will be in the field in November for the first time since Wimbledon 2014. His win over Marin Cilic in the French Open final was his first career title. "I have to be happy that I won my fourth French Open title. At the same time, I have the humbleness of a champion to realize that I am but a small part of a system that won three grand slams in one year. No one should be deluded into thinking that he alone can bring a championship home". "I'm going to have to wait for the year when I'm a Grand Slam champion". Djokovic, who is yet to complete a full season in 2018, said after the French Open final that he would be ready for the event. "I'm not sure I will be there", Djokovic said. This year's 18-year-old phenom is anyone's guess.
