Mar 15, 2019 .Highlights of the 9th annual American College of Neuropsychopharmacology (ACNP) Conference on Experimental and Clinical Psychopharmacology. Poster presentations were chosen from abstracts submitted to the conference by panel of ACNP members who were asked to nominate at least one poster abstract from their field of research. The accepted posters were judged by at least two conference attendees, and the same two persons were asked to judge each poster again after the conference. To ensure objectivity, the reviewers compared the results of their first judgments and agreed on the top three posters for each

Possible role of adiponectin in systemic inflammation following a major illness in humans. Adiponectin is an adipose tissue-derived hormone that has been shown to be an antiatherogenic and anti-inflammatory agent in vitro and in experimental models. Many diseases, including chronic inflammatory conditions, can be associated with elevated circulating levels of proinflammatory adipokines. The aim of this study was to determine the relationship between adiponectin and other circulating adipokines (e.g., leptin and tumor necrosis factor-alpha [TNF-alpha]) in the context of acute illness in humans. Patients (n = 33) with acute infection (n = 16) or sepsis (n = 17) were studied and compared with matched, healthy, noninfected controls (n = 42) and to an infectious, nondiseased population (n = 18). Subjects had acute inflammation (WBC > 10(3) cells/mm(3)) with either high or low signs of infection. Inflammation was followed by a decline in plasma adiponectin within 2 wk, along with marked increases in circulating TNF-alpha and leptin. The observed decreases in adiponectin were independent of the etiology of inflammation or degree of inflammation. Decreases in adiponectin were closely followed by changes in plasma TNF-alpha and leptin, which are also known to be associated with inflammation, and these changes were sustained beyond 2 wk. In contrast, during the same 3da54e8ca3
