A group has filed a motion for a hearing before the 9th Circuit Court of Appeals in an attempt to force the 9th Circuit to take up their argument to completely ban the enforcement of California's "sanctuary" laws. Sanctuary laws are a new form of crime, which is actually a term often bandied about in reference to the Fourth Amendment. The Fourth Amendment is only applicable to someone seeking to search or seize your person or property. It is completely unrelated to an immigration crackdown. When someone's Fourth Amendment rights are violated, that's a crime. That's why it's called Fourth Amendment, or Constitution, or Bill of Rights. When someone is facing incarceration by the state, it is called a crime. If you've done something wrong, you have a legal right to have your day in court and face your accusers. That is the purpose of the legal system. It is not the purpose of the legal system to give you a slap on the wrist and then let you go back out and commit more crimes. This is done in violation of the 4th Amendment. When California passed the "sanctuary" laws, they claimed they were passed to help "protect immigrant residents who cooperate with law enforcement" and possibly protect some "victims of crime." The fact that they're doing it against the rule of law is causing major issues, and just like any other crime, they need to go before a judge, get convicted, and pay the penalty. "Protecting immigrants from deportation can be a daunting task, and the
