It's interesting, I know. .Remarks by Chancellor Angela Merkel to the Church of Europe Parliamentary Assembly, Bruges, Belgium, 8 June 2017 Honourable members of the Church of Europe Parliamentary Assembly, I have the pleasure to address you here in your hallowed hall today. Before I express our gratitude to Archbishop Hans Hermann Tietje for his invitation, on behalf of the German government and the Bundeskabinett, I should like to add a few words about the historical background of Bruges. Bruges and Ghent. Three hundred years ago, the Dutch-speaking people were a minority in the area around Bruges. At that time, this town was one of the largest in the Dutch-speaking world. It was - and I am not exaggerating - the most highly regarded trading and religious centre of the Low Countries, a role reflected also in the endowment and the prosperity of its Cathedral. When, half a century ago, Germany fell to our territory, the Catholic Church was given the opportunity to make Bruges a German town. Thanks to the efforts of the city's Bruges Cathedral Chapter, this was achieved in 1972. In this context, it will be well to mention that the decision taken by the German government in the fall of 1972 to adopt Bruges as a Bundesstadt was a cause of concern to many here - in particular, to some of our members. However, the German government was acting in accordance with its mandate under international law. It respected the autonomy of the former Belgian municipalities and made room for minorities such as the Calvinists in the local community. In accord with the decisions taken by the German government, Bruges is now a municipality with an elected local council, a mayor and administrative structures that guarantee, among other things, legal certainty for all members of the community. In the following years, Bruges experienced profound changes. The city played a major role in economic and

Histological findings and the results of the direct immunofluorescence method for P. carinii antigen were compared with the findings from the postmortem lung. Pneumocystis carinii can be demonstrated in the open alveoli by histology and by in situ hybridization in the corresponding cysts. It was noted that P. carinii cysts were often found in the pneumonic lung areas, even when severe cases did not show any pathogenic organisms by stain for gram positive or gram negative bacteria. These findings indicate that in situ hybridization might be the most useful for the diagnosis of P. carinii infection. age (median 5.5 and 3 years, respectively) between the age groups. Therefore, it
