This tutorial is for people new to Photoshop. Other tutorials are at the end of this tutorial. Before beginning, check that you have: Photoshop CS2 or newer Photoshop Elements 6 or newer The Software Download File or a valid copy of Photoshop CC or Elements 12 or newer Adobe Photoshop's interface. 1. Map out your actions Your first step is to plan and organize your workflow by creating a grid and folder structure to keep all your project files organized. The Grid and Folder Structure First, create two folders on your hard drive for your projects, called Grid and Project. In Grid, create a folder for every section of your design — Head, Chest, Arms, Legs, Other, etc. These folders should be named by the tab name on the tabbed panel. Your project folder should contain one subfolder for each image you are working on. Create the two folders, then put all of the images for a particular section into the appropriate folder. You'll have one folder per section. You'll need one of these folders per image — a Header Folder, a Chest Folder, a Leg Folder, an Arm Folder, and a Head Folder. You'll keep copies of each image in all these folders. 2. Draw out your design on a piece of paper Sometimes laying things out in pencil or paper helps your visualization and organization. Draw the conceptual foundations of your design on a large sheet of paper. Here are some things to consider: The size, shape and style of the product The logo and tag line The background you're going to use Here's an example of a premade template that gets the job done quickly. 3. Start with an image Create a new Photoshop document and save it as a Photoshop PSD file. This is for the most part an introduction to photoshop. I'll cover the basic tools in more detail in the next tutorial. 4. Create the first layer Set up the first layer in the document, which will be used to outline everything on the page. Click on the Layers Panel icon in the lower left side of Photoshop's workspace. The Layers Panel is represented by three strips of various color. The top red strip is the Layer panel. If the other two layers are showing, you'll see the left yellow strip (the

Q: How can I create a PHP new module for a Magento webshop? I have a Magento webshop and would like to implement some new functionality, but I'm not sure how I would go about this and how different it is to creating a "custom" module for Magento. The function I want to add is the ability to upload a large (image) file of any kind and to allow me to organize that file in folders (just like on your local files). The file should be available at a later time with the possibility of checking modifications to the file. I would also like to have some sort of "status" system to do things like show the current file status or have the possibility to mark a file as "changed". This would be required functionality for adding a product to the webshop, but since I'm fairly new to Magento, I do not know where to start. From what I know it should be possible to somehow "create" a new class in the same way you do in PHP by creating a new php file. So is it, somehow possible to somehow extend the files of Magento, create a new class and use it like a normal module? Regards, Tommaso A: I recommend creating a new module for it: - Install the Magento module generator: - Install the extension: - Now install your module (add a row to database table) - Enable Magento for your module. Add a new file (e.g. upload) in the /app/code/local/VendorName/Custom/ directory. - Fill in the code of your new functionnalities - Test if all works as expected, then add some database tables (i.e. manually). Now test again and check if everything works as expected. Maybe you should ask your client to enter some information in the backoffice if you have a custom admin section. In one of his most dramatic and novel political performances ever, Alex Salmond has gone on the offensive with David Cameron by accusing him of giving in to the 'fascism' of the Westminster elite. The First Minister has admitted he could have been firm on the independence question when he held office in the past but he now believes the simple answer to any problems was to go it alone. Alex Salmond's opponents were left seething at his indictment of the Prime Minister, which included a vow never to back the No campaign again. The Prime Minister's team responded by reminding Scotland of Mr Salmond's 'outstanding' record as First Minister, which included the consistent budget surplus which saved Scotland from recession, the Scottish budget's independence from Westminster, the country's first ever share issue, and the constitution's proposed reform of the Scottish Parliament's voting system. Before heading off on the short campaign tour on Thursday, Mr Salmond told the press in front of the National Gallery in central London: "I thought it was very important to speak out on this question. "It is not a simple case of believing that once you have built an economy for the UK that the UK's governing elite takes over your economy and runs it for the benefit of their friends and family. "I know why you had my job in the past, I thought that was right. "But now I think the answer to any questions from my point of view is to remain as an independent state. "That was my point of view as First Minister, and that is the point of view we are putting across here today." Meanwhile, Douglas Alexander's spokeswoman told the Press Association there was a "ferocious election within the Lib Dems" as the party was torn by the internal divisions sparked by his attacks on the Labour leader. Alex Salmond and David Cameron pose for the media today Credit: PA The comments are the first time Mr Salmond has directly addressed Mr Cameron since the election was called in September and come at a crucial stage of the battle for Scotland's future. In a wide-ranging election-day interview, Mr Salmond said no country had been harmed by leaving the EU and warned Labour's approach to the single currency was heading towards a "recession"
