You need to run the.exe file from the box. Can any one help me fix this. Thanks in advance A: Looks like there is a problem with the source code. This works: This one is good: Dear Editor, Pregabalin (PGB) is a highly selective alpha2-delta ligand that attenuates neurotransmission in the central nervous system. It is clinically used in the treatment of peripheral and central neuropathic pain, as well as anxiety and related disorders. The pharmacological activity of pregabalin has been attributed to its high affinity for the alpha2-delta subunit of calcium channels. It is available as 75 mg, 150 mg, and 300 mg extended release tablets. It is usually taken 2 hours before bedtime. In a recent article by Silva et al.,[@b1-jpr-9-515] the authors showed that pregabalin significantly alleviates neuropathic pain symptoms, produces a prompt and long-lasting analgesic effect, and improves sleep quality. However, a single dose of 300 mg pregabalin may not always be the optimal therapeutic dose for all patients; it does not necessarily reflect the usual therapeutic regimens where patients are given 300 mg pregabalin once a day at bedtime. The doses of pregabalin and its therapeutic plasma concentrations ( $>4$  ng/mL) are 80 mg, 150 mg, and 300 mg, respectively. Each therapeutic regimen delivers a plasma concentration of 4.0 ng

When the charismatic leader who ran the world's only superpower promised a radical shift in approach to cancer research, students in Changsha, the capital city of Hunan province, were ready. Just weeks after the Manchurian candidate left office in January, Changsha's Health Encyclopedia and Research Center, a sprawling office tower with stained-glass windows and sweeping views, was fully staffed with more than a thousand doctors and researchers. Soon, the center was busy developing a number of projects to help patients on the frontlines of cancer treatment. But some of the university's resources went for projects that, according to the families of at least two people who worked on them, had nothing to do with cancer. One was a two-year study of the last hours of the lives of infants and dying patients, a project that, like many others, relied on blood, hair and other bodily fluids. "I would like a normal life," said the man's wife, who was not named to protect her family. "If possible, I would like to raise a family...If I can't enjoy my family life, I don't want to live anymore." The other, less publicized study was apparently a long-running project funded by an obscure private group called the Supreme League of the Patriots of China and supported in part by the Chinese Communist Party's public health institute. These are not isolated cases. A medical executive from the United States who has been involved in research similar to the Hunan projects for more than 20 years said there were dozens more, in locations from southern China to the western coast, that seemed to have no plausible reason for existing. "Cancer research is changing," said Steve Jobs, who founded Apple and died last year. "It's a powerful force for good. I hope it never again becomes what it was in the 1950s, when this country embarked on a massive effort to wage war on cancer." Many of China's leading cancer experts and researchers said the problem was part of a larger emerging public health threat: indiscriminate and under-regulated research at hundreds of institutes that don't follow Western standards. Chinese researchers, many of them long seen as capable, are increasingly turning to techniques that can give them the upper hand, for instance through the use of illegal animal components, according to Steve Su, a doctor at the Memorial Sloan Kettering
