In the human genome, ERV elements were found to constitute between 5 and 11% of all DNA sequences \[@B1\]. A frequent class of ERVs is the L1 superfamily, composed of approximately 300,000-500,000 copies. One third of these elements are defective and, probably, only a small fraction of these elements is transcriptionally active \[@B2\]-\[@B4\]. The fact that more than 80% of the ERVs are defective at the nucleotide sequence level \[@B5\],\[@B6\], indicates that the capacity for ERV activity must be much higher than reported and ERVs may have a function that we have not yet identified. Results ===== In order to explore the potential of ERVs to produce proteins, the IgV-J-Cys2-His2 (IgV-J-CH2) zinc finger protein, a member of the CH2 zinc finger family, was chosen. Its functional domain, the J-Cys2-His2 zinc finger domain, is a widely conserved DNA binding domain found in several transcription factors \[@B7\]. The IgV-J-CH2 gene was amplified from human genomic DNA, cloned into an expression vector and expressed in Escherichia coli. Recombinant IgV-J-CH2 was purified by metal chelating affinity chromatography and Zn
