Tuesday, July 19, 2013 Detainees on the Verge of Death (via: Democracy Now) The story of Hassan Diab, a French citizen of Algerian origin imprisoned in the U.S., raises a series of questions, including: How far are the United States willing to go in its use of indefinite detention?... The United States has no viable legal rationale for keeping Diab locked up, but it does have an invasion of its sovereignty, and an act of perfidy to its own citizens who are living in France. Hassan Diab The role played by President Obama in Diab's case should be further investigated. Former U.S. Attorney General Ramsey Clark pointed to a key element of Diab's life story: after Diab was convicted of terrorist actions while studying abroad in France, he came to the United States as a lawful permanent resident on a student visa and became a citizen in the year 2000. Since his time as a lawful permanent resident, Diab has traveled freely between the United States and France, where he married and has three children. Today, Diab, who is suffering from diabetes, is scheduled to be extradited to France, which has given him until July 27 to show that he faces possible execution. Although he was born in France, his family is of Algerian descent and he has a French passport. Diab, who was 29 when arrested, is a French national, as well as a citizen of Algeria and France. In addition, Diab has lived more than 25 years in the United States, has a college degree, and is fluent in French, English, and Arabic. Diab's case has been a legal and moral quagmire for the United States since his arrest at John F. Kennedy International Airport in November 2001. Diab's lawyer, who was also his college professor, has claimed that Diab was not taken to a detention facility at JFK, but instead was processed by the Transportation Safety Administration. The case was never brought before a judge in the Lower Manhattan Detention Center before Diab was sent to the center at the end of 2002. Diab's lawyer, who has written about the issue, reported that in 2002, then-New York City Mayor Rudolph Giuliani was under intense pressure from immigration-enforcement agents and officials to detain Diab in the city, but Mayor Bloomberg refused. The U.S. District Court for the Southern District of New York in 2010 rejected Diab's

A cell-based biosensor for detection of pneumolysin in Staphylococcus aureus. Biosensors for bacteria detection are of current interest in the food and health industries. This report describes a novel bacterial biosensor that identifies the clinically relevant virulence factor pneumolysin (PLY) produced by Staphylococcus aureus on the surface of living cells. PLY causes neurotoxicity in humans and is involved in the infections associated with S. aureus. The biosensor is comprised of human neuroblastoma cells that are transfected with the NLRP3 inflammasome and a PLY-activated FLAG-tagged inflammasome sensor. Stimulation of this biosensor by PLY results in secretion of IL-18, which can then be measured using a specific IL-18 ELISA. Biosensor specificity and biosensor capacity for the detection of PLY were compared to that of a conventional cell-based biosensor platform. The biosensor was able to detect PLY at concentrations as low as 10 pg ml(-1) in cell media. The biosensor was also able to detect 10 pg ml(-1) PLY that had been pre-incubated with whole human serum, and was therefore able to detect non-toxic levels of PLY. The biosensor was able to detect PLY produced by three different S. aureus strains. In addition, the biosensor was able to detect PLY when expressed at different levels (transiently and stably) as determined by Western blot.Social network users: What was your first? Mine was Facebook – I started using it in 2007 with high expectations. I didn't really make any real friendships, or any "clicking" connections – just a list of everyone who was (or, once, might have been) my "friend". It was ridiculous! It took me a while to realise that I just had to let it all go. It was like a bunch of people I didn't know telling me that they thought I was odd, or weird. I decided that the only friends I would make would be those who already had similar interests, and knew that I was quirky. But that all changed when the friend I was trying to make me "friend" asked me out! I clicked on "accept" on his profile and suddenly he was my "
