In a lot of ways, Bernie Sanders is much like the other candidates running for the Democratic nomination for president. Sanders (I-Vt.) knows that his campaign isn't about him, but about his ideas, his mission, and his supporters. And so, he is making that argument again and again. In a speech Tuesday evening, Sanders explained why he believes he's the best candidate to address a basic set of problems — that the economics of American society are built around “a rigged economy which essentially guarantees that almost all new income and wealth goes to the top 1%” — that all other Democrats, and much of the mainstream media, have ignored. By employing logic and transparency, by explaining and defending his ideas, Sanders has made it clear why his supporters like him. Now, he must use the same principles to persuade Americans who are likely to vote in the Democratic primary but who haven't yet committed to Clinton or Sanders. “I want to be the nominee. I want to be elected president of the United States. And I think I have a unique ability to do that,” Sanders said. “I want to win this nomination, and I want to win this election. That's my goal.” While Sanders' history in the Democratic Party is quite contentious — he ran for the Democratic nomination in 2016 and was rejected by the party, although he received some votes from superdelegates — his approach to politics is not. Sanders has never been beholden to the Democratic Party. “People can disagree with me, but I believe in a politics of love,” he said. “There is no reason why we can't be friends, why we can't respect one another even when we disagree.” In an interview with Vox's Jeff Stein on Tuesday, Sanders said he has never been a Democratic Socialist. This is a term that has been used by Democrats and Republicans for years to smear their ideological opponents, and that Democratic candidates have used to brand themselves as more compassionate, more inclusive. “I do not believe that working people are inherently incapable of governing this country,” Sanders said. “I think that basically you have in the modern American history a movement of workers and middle class people, and you have a corporate elite.” Sanders went further in the interview. “The reason why I didn't

Is the Federal Reserve finally losing its grip on the U.S. economy? In a research note published last week, Briefing.com writer Jeff Taylor said the Fed might be “on the verge of losing control over the U.S. economic cycle.” Advertisement The Fed's $1.3 trillion balance sheet, which is the largest in the history of the United States and involves holding some 30% of all the government debt in circulation, is a clear reason for the Fed to be afraid, as it stands as the biggest risk of inflation. Read Next The difference between the jobless rate in April and May of 2019 was greater than the jobs loss of October 2008 and the jobs gain of April 2014. Last year was also the first year since 2009 that there was no increase in average hourly earnings. This invention relates to a tool to insert and remove a tap from a threaded portion of a workpiece and, more particularly, to a tool for removing a tap from a tapped hole in a workpiece. In the assembly of various types of tubular fittings, typically a mounting flange on the fitting has a tapped hole that is adapted to receive a tapped bolt, fitting a threaded flange of an associated duct or pipe. A tap is used to make a thread in the tapped hole. In use, the fitting is not generally assembled to another structure, but the threaded portion of the fitting is temporarily fastened to the pipe or duct in the course of securing an end of the pipe or duct to another structure. To remove the threaded portion of the fitting from the pipe or duct after use, a tap is removed from the tapped hole in the fitting. Typically a tapping tool is used to tap the tapping hole in the workpiece, tapping the fitting. After tapping the fitting, the tapping tool is used to remove the tap from the tapped hole. During use, the tapping tool is typically held with the tapping tool striking the tap with one striking member, while a knob or another striking member is used to remove the tap from the tapped hole. Various tools have been developed over the years for removing taps from a tapped hole in a workpiece. Some of these tools use a single striking member, such as a pin for removing a tap and another member, such as a blade, for contacting and striking the tap to remove the tap from the tapped hole. See, for example, U.S. Pat. Nos. 2,983,113 and 5,538,
