Files: fetih1453fullmoviearabicdownload.h Q: Tomcat fails to load native library when deploying war I have a Servlet that use Java Native Library. I deploy the war by using mvn tomcat7:run-war. It works fine as long as I don't move it to another computer. But when I move it to another computer, the web application crashes on startup. I'm pretty sure it's due to the lib files doesn't get generated on the remote server. I'm wondering why it only occurs when deploying the war, because there's no exception thrown during the tomcat startup. I don't think it's related to the JDK version because I copied the same war on a machine with JDK8 and it works fine. Cannot make it to work with maven-war-plugin or directly by copying the lib files manually. The error is java.lang.UnsatisfiedLinkError: no jnlvc in java.library.path The java_library_path in both tomcat6 and tomcat7 is /usr/lib/jvm/jdk1.7.0/jre/lib/amd64/server. A: This is a problem with the JVM and the server where Tomcat is run. On a computer where Tomcat is run, generally the JVM and the Java libraries are expected to be already present in /usr/lib/jvm/jdk1.7.0/jre/lib/amd64/server. If these libraries are not present in this location, the operating system or installation of the Tomcat package has failed. In the case of some operating systems (see JDK 8 installation), this location is not automatically copied into the JVM execution and library locations. I suggest that you consult the documentation of your specific JVM / Tomcat installation. Dehydroepiandrosterone sulphate, a putative non-genomic corticosteroid, modulates caspase-12 and attenuates amyloidbeta(1-42)-induced neurotoxicity in primary cortical cultures. Dehydroepiandrosterone sulphate (DHEA-S) is a pro-hormone with a well documented neuroprotective and cognitive-enhancing action that has been reported to cross the blood brain barrier. However, little is known about DHEA-S's direct actions at the single cell level.
