Field of the Invention The present invention relates to an output control circuit which is capable of controlling the output of a multivibrator used as a timing circuit. 2. Description of the Prior Art In the prior art, there is a problem of how to control the output of a multivibrator so that the multi-vibrator will operate stably. For example, in the case where the input pulse width of a digital signal becomes larger, the oscillation time of a multivibrator becomes longer. Therefore, in order to obtain a stable oscillation, the pulse width of the input pulse must be kept small. However, in the case of driving a multivibrator by a digital signal, it is difficult to input a pulse width smaller than a certain value, so that the problem of the necessity of keeping the pulse width small cannot be avoided.), const AudioMultiChannelUpmix::ChannelMap& channels, bool bComputeCfg, bool stereoToMonoIndices) const; bool isCascade(const ChannelMap& channels, uint32_t outputChannels) const; bool applyTransport(const AudioMultiChannelUpmix::ChannelMap& channels, const Frame& frame, const AudioSource& source, int bufferIndex) const; bool applyTransport(const AudioMultiChannelUpmix::ChannelMap& channels,

. .Q: How to inject Interface in JAX-RS Controller? I'm working on a web-app using JAX-RS and I'm having problems injecting an Interface in a JAX-RS Controller. I've searched in the documentation how to do this but I'm stuck. My interface looks like this: public interface MediaToRetrieve { public void getMedia(); } And my Controller looks like this: @Path("/media") public class MediaController{ @Inject private MediaToRetrieve mediaToRetrieve; @GET @Produces(MediaType.APPLICATION_JSON) @Path("/retrieve") public Response getMedia(@QueryParam("id") Integer id){ return Response.ok().build(); } } I've tried using constructor injection and getting an error at compilation time: Error: No default constructor found I've also tried using @Provides but I still get a compilation error. Also if I need to inject some generic, I think it has to be in the controller, how can I inject an interface? A: If you really want to inject the MediaToRetrieve you should either: Use constructor injection and have a constructor with parameter MediaToRetrieve. Create a bean that contains this MediaToRetrieve, annotate it @Component and then do injection like @Resource private MediaToRetrieve mediaToRetrieve; And then do a getBean() on the bean And if you want to inject some generic (which you should probably be doing unless you have some kind of framework that does this for you), you do that like @Resource private MediaToRetrieve mediaToRetrieve; and then you can inject a bean with the generic type. The idea is to get address, date and phone on the contact us form. The fields for this are added with hook_contact_us_form_fields_alter. The form works and it gets the values when I submit them. But when I try to edit them it doesn't update the values. Is it because the form is built on controller to view. How can I fix this problem? A: I think you have to
