Completed in 1833, it is the easternmost of the city's seven defensive barriers. History In the mid-18th century, the construction of the Royal Admiralty was carried out on the right bank of the Neva River. Due to the continuing expansion of the city, the Admiralty was also constructed on the opposite embankment. The building of the embankment required the lifting of the Neva's water, and the construction of the Moika Canal. The construction of the embankment continued following the establishment of Saint Petersburg as Russia's imperial capital. In

1803, a line of wooden piles was driven into the sea, and sections of embankment were built along this, the eastern side of the river. Following the abolition of serfdom in 1861, rapid construction began on the embankment, and by 1873 the protective line of wood piles had reached the shore of the White Sea, the largest inlet of the Baltic Sea. On the orders of Tsar Alexander II the first stone buildings were erected in May 1833 on the embankment, with many Russian imperialists speculating on the future traffic growth of the city. The embankment was cleared of trees and bushes, and today its central section is called the Parkovsky embankment (), named after the commander-in-chief of the city's fortifications during World War I. At the start of the 20th century, the embankment was widened, and the central section of the embankment is now called the Parkovsky Avenue, and further extensions were built on the embankment as well. This was officially named the Dvortsovaya embankment () after the tsar's son Grand Duke Dmitry, who oversaw its construction. In 1899, the Park and Kolomenskoye embankments were completed. The position of the embankment during the final days of the Second World War was important, as it protected the central area of the city from German attack. During the siege, the 0cc13bf012

The new retail and office space at Highgate Village opened its doors to the public in December of this year and is providing a dynamic and vibrant environment for shopping and work. The shops which opened this Christmas in the heart of this bustling market town, include a gastro pub, fashion store, coffee shop and more. The area is fully occupied by tenants, with four of the six shops now have signed agreements to extend their leases, and more are currently in negotiation. The new extensions will give the shops access to the Highgate Road which will provide a convenient connection with Central London, and also feature some unique shops to offer the very best in marketing and publicising solutions. The area is further enhanced by a three-storey extension featuring public toilets, a new cafe and the showcase of the inspiring and informative Exhibition Hall.Sometimes after you've been in the business of providing space for others, you get a sense of self when you look at other people—like it's your space, too. If you find yourself in this position, know that you are doing your job. You have worked hard to make the space yours, so keep it all to yourself. In this third in a series of whiteboard roundtable discussions to investigate the feasibility of President Obama's executive order to speed up the ability of entrepreneurs to start, grow, and compete in the next phase
