What's New In Image Saver (Browser Cache)?

Image Saver (Browser Cache) Overview: Images are a part of almost every web site. When you visit a web site, you often view a number of images. When you view an image, you often right click on it to save it. However, right clicking and saving images can be a laborious task. Imagine the amount of time you could save if you could simply click once, rather than right click repeatedly. You could take matters into your own hands and simply keep your image viewing and saving process automated. One way you can do this is to use a tool called Image Saver (Browser Cache). This tool allows you to save multiple images without having to right click on each one. It allows you to save images that are as large as 1024×1024 and can save images from any web site you visit. Using the Image Saver (Browser Cache) Tool: When you install Image Saver (Browser Cache) you can add a new folder to your hard drive and create a watch folder. You can place images you want to watch inside this folder. Then, you can browse to the watch folder when you are online. Images that meet your specifications are automatically downloaded and saved to another folder on your hard drive. You can configure Image Saver (Browser Cache) to save images of a particular size or of a particular file name. You can set it to automatically download and save all images that meet your specifications, or you can choose which ones it saves. You can configure Image Saver (Browser Cache) to look for images in certain web sites, or you can let it browse the entire Internet. Images you find can be automatically saved to your folder or you can specify a location to save them. Why Should I Use Image Saver (Browser Cache)?: Right clicking and saving images can be a time consuming process. Imagine the amount of time you could save if you could simply click once on the images you want to save. That's just one reason why you may want to try Image Saver (Browser Cache).
