BEVERLY CARTER: My grandmother, who is also a wonderful writer named Janet Petersen, would say that you don't have to pick a husband when you're young. She was very good about collecting the dregs of the pool and making the best of situations. I was lucky to have a mom and a grandmother who were strong, wise, funny and loving. I also had the luck to grow up in an age where men were regarded more as employees than as husbands. Still, I cannot remember being told that the only important decision in my life was whom to marry. It came across more as something you had to do if you were lucky. But I think having many strong relationships and dating one man in particular was very helpful to me at least on the relationship front. I never knew where I would find love again if I didn't know where to look. Even though the relationships weren't romantic or that extraordinary, they were good ones. Most important, they taught

American Joe has taken an unusual marketing approach to popularize his upcoming project, Blackfish, called “seething with anger.” He’s not so much focusing on fame as he is on making sure his story reaches millions of people. The Canadian born, Shreveport, Louisiana native is preparing his project as his next offering up for potential buyers via Kickstarter, a crowdfunded social media funding platform. Blackfish is a film about a killer whale at SeaWorld’s Orlando (Florida) Florida park. When trainers begin to lose their lives, the park’s management feels compelled to display killer whales in a manner that’s even more unnatural and harmful. Joe says his film will reveal “...the real story as to why the trainers are killed, the profound amount of pain and suffering they endure, and the fact that the very existence of these orcas is morally wrong, yet the government looks the other way, thereby creating a multi-billion dollar industry that benefits from the [orca] exploitation, keeps these animals in nearly impossible conditions, and somehow, the [government], through the influence of taxpayer money, makes excuses for such devastating cruelty.” If you haven’t heard of him, Joe probably isn’t known as a well known celebrity. Rather, he’s known in animal groups as a private investigator who has documented numerous animal abuse cases and helped others create awareness of the ill treatment and exploitation of animals. A series of investigations he’s performed, will help provide the
