and there are other ways to change the display of icons for applications, folders, or shortcuts on your windows. the services "desktop" and "display settings" are still functional on windows 10 and are updated based on your settings, so if you want to change the position of icons on your desktop, the "desktop app-preferences" service will help. as i mentioned earlier, people have to set different settings for different types of desktops, so they can change the position of icons, or delete the icons when they don't like them. for example, you might want to move or hide the application icons on your desktop; you will also be able to move or hide the desktop icons that start with j,k,l,m,n, or o. but even if a user wants to follow the method that the service is offering, they will still have to step outside of the windows settings in the registry editor to make the necessary changes to the registry. the icons on windows can be changed in a variety of ways. you can either use third-party apps or you can make changes to the registry to change a specific icon. both methods have the same effect and require you to provide the path to an.ico file via the registry editor. an internet explorer and windows 7 issue that was corrected in an update on september 12, 2008 allowed remote attackers to read or write arbitrary memory from the internet explorer 6, 7, and 8 process due to insufficient bounds checking in the animated cursor code in microsoft windows 2000 sp4 through windows vista. the issue is caused due to insufficient bounds checking in the chbcursornext

block of the riff.ani, cur, or.ico file. note: this might be a duplicate of cve-2005-0416; if so, then cve-2007-0038 should be preferred.
