Currency Converter! AshSofDev Currency Converter is a lightweight piece of kit you can use to perform conversions between various types of currency available worldwide, such as the US Dollar, Russian Rouble, British Pound, Hong Kong Dollar, and Swedish Krona. Requirements and setup It obtains the latest exchange rate from a website, so you must have an active Internet connection. Besides this, the tool offers to download and install .NET Framework, since it cannot work without this software framework. You can decline the offer if you already have it on your computer, though. As far as the GUI is concerned, AshSofDev Currency Converter adopts a small panel with a clear-cut interface, showing two dropdown menus for selecting the source and output currency. Get the exchange rate and perform conversions You can start by retrieving the current exchange rate from the website, displayed with four decimals. In the following step, it's possible to enter the amount of money and click a button to carry out the conversion instantly. Results reveal both the source and output modes of currency, in addition to the target number, which has only two decimals (estimated according to the exchange rate). There's also a "Load" button available in the interface, but we couldn't figure out what it does (clicking it didn't trigger anything). Unfortunately, the software utility doesn't implement features for displaying converted rates in multiple types of currency at the same time. There's no button for copying the result, but it can be selected and copied via Ctrl+C or by opening the right-click menu. Modest and easy-to-use currency converter All in all, AshSofDev Currency Converter doesn't bring anything new to the table. It doesn't have comprehensive set of options and depends on .NET Framework, but it offers a faster alternative for performing currency conversions than exploring the Internet. Turns out that if you wanted to figure out how much time you had in game, you could look at your saved games from the past. Numerous players have shared a screenshot of a save file from 2009 with Kotaku which shows the times from the past. The screenshot shows, at a glance, that the current time is 1:59 AM, while the time from the previous save file is 3:10 PM. Based on this, we can get an estimate of the time remaining. We took the time from the previous save file, and

Brian Kenny (34) from Dorset Park in Finglas, Dublin, pleaded guilty at Dublin Circuit Criminal Court to two counts of sexually assaulting a girl under 13. Yesterday he was told he would receive three years imprisonment but would only serve two. The judge, Justice Caroline Linnane, agreed with a probation report which said the course of offending over the period of three months from December 2014 to February 2015 was not "foreseeable or inevitable". Mr Kenny, who had no previous convictions, admitted sexually assaulting the child over a period of three months in 2014. At the hearing, his barrister Pat Gallagher submitted his client's version of events. He said the defendant, who runs a hairdressing business, was getting a haircut from the girl when he was interrupted by her mother who told him to leave. He had gone downstairs and was standing outside when he saw her at the front door. He said he asked the woman why her daughter was at the door and he asked if she was all right. He said he had an argument with her over the dog lead he was holding in his hand. He said she grabbed the dog lead and he removed it and felt a "hard push" on his chest. He said he had not realised she was choking him until he pushed her away. He said she removed the tie from his neck and let go of him. He was arrested and interviewed by gardai. He was ordered not to have any contact with the child. Mr Gallagher said: "He came into the house to buy a magazine or a postcard and he was in a holding pen area. He came into the house and the dog lead fell out and he was holding it when the child grabbed it and put her hands around his neck."
