With this newest version of the application, users who work in the browser can have the same breadth of tools in the desktop version. Over the past several years, the photography community has adopted the Adobe Creative Cloud applications, including Adobe Photoshop and Adobe Lightroom, to use for most of their image editing needs. Often, the client workflow involves sending non-editing tasks and edits back and forth to the photographer. As photographers continue to adopt a more mobile-first approach to creativity, there has been a demand for a more collaborative editing experience that can help photographers create beautiful images simply. To address these needs, the team behind Photoshop has developed a set of new technologies powered by Adobe Sensei, the AI platform that powers Photoshop's style-making technology. This collection of new technologies, called Share for Review, enables photographers to start a collaborative editing session virtually in the browser and see changes in real-time. They also embrace some of the latest ideas in the browser, including real-time embedded help, and better autocomplete features for native tasks such as text and styles.
